LEE ADLER: A PRESERVATION HERO

The death of Leopold Adler, II on January 29, 2012, marked the end of a brilliantly led life, a remarkable record of accomplishment, and truly the closing of an era. Sir Christopher Wren's famous epitaph in his creation, St. Paul's Cathedral, says simply, "Reader, if you seek his monument look around you." The historic districts of Savannah, Georgia, provide a similar symbol for Lee Adler's life, for there are countless buildings and public spaces which would simply not exist but for his leadership and work.

In 1968, Anna Hunter, the most significant founder of Historic Savannah Foundation spoke to the Friends of the Library and said of Lee Adler's early involvement with Historic Savannah: "ENTER DYNAMO... It is not often that a burgeoning civic project has the good fortune to have the man of the hour loom on the horizon at a critical hour... He has put Historic Savannah Foundation on a big business basis, driven relentlessly to bring the city to which he is dedicated to national recognition..." Indeed Lee and his wonderful wife Emma led a group during the 1960s that was totally devoted to Savannah's preservation and prosperity; they left no stone unturned in their pursuit of excellence for the city.

Lee's accomplishments are legendary but by now, are largely taken for granted. He was the first to see Savannah's potential in heritage tourism. He hired consultants who found that the economic impact of tourism in Savannah was only approximately $150,000 in 1958. Under his leadership, a comprehensive plan for tourism development was published by the Chamber of Commerce and Historic Savannah Foundation in 1965. Today, the economic impact of tourism in Savannah/Chatham County is approximately $1 billion annually.

Under Lee's guidance, a professional survey of downtown's historic district led to the establishment of America's largest National Historic Landmark District. Lee's strong business and investment knowledge led him to the establishment of a Revolving Fund for historic properties in 1964. This real estate based program literally changed the nature of preservation and the face of Savannah. Historic Savannah's Revolving Fund has now impacted approximately 400 historic buildings. Lee's early work in the Savannah Victorian District pioneered the combination of preservation and the creation of workforce housing in the early 1970s. This program was called Savannah Landmark, and it brought thousands of dollars of grant money to the city and created over 400 units of low/moderate income housing. It was for this work that he earned numerous awards, including the National Medal of the Arts from President George H. W. Bush in 1989. This project, while lauded internationally, was criticized by some short-sighted Savannahians as "dealing with a criminal element." Lee's courage and compassion for the less fortunate were an inspiration to many people, and brought a social conscience to preservation.

Lee's contentious work to save River Street from the Hyatt Hotel, his personal intervention to save the Lucas Theatre, advocacy for the work of Mr. W.W. Law and the preservation of African American history, encouragement of Savannah College of Art and Design in its controversial early years, and scores of other projects and programs are accepted as givens today, but each was a struggle.

As important as Lee Adler was to Savannah, his national contributions are equally impressive. He traveled tirelessly to 38 states and internationally to tell the Savannah preservation story of how historic buildings could be saved by using real estate development principles. His annual session at the National Trust conference entitled "Real Estate is the Name of the Game" was its most popular and inspired generations of young preservationists. Today a great number of organizations have revolving funds and they all owe a huge debt to Lee Adler. The National Trust granted him its highest honor, the Crowninshield Award, in 1982.

Lee was a huge personality and a celebrity in the preservation world, and yet he was always interested in helping small towns and people just getting started in preservation. He was as generous with his time, his expertise, and with his lunch expense account as anyone I have ever known.

His love and enthusiasm for Savannah were overwhelming. His expectations were high and he made those who worked with him increase their commitment to protecting America's most beautiful city. If he praised you, you knew he meant it, for he was always sincere and frank.

His determination and fierce drive were a force to contend with. Savannah has missed Lee Adler since his illness took him off the front lines. I know I miss him and I believe America misses him as well. 📷

GEORGIA TRUST FOR HISTORIC PRESERVATION FALL RAMBLE SET FOR LAGRANGE & BEYOND, OCTOBER 12-14

Fall foliage and cooler temperatures bring the Fall Ramble, so mark your calendars for October 12-14, 2012, and plan to join us as we explore LaGrange, Warm Springs & Pine Mountain. The itinerary is filled with a variety of interesting historic sites, including charming downtown centers, splendid homes, lovely gardens, and the fascinating places associated with President Franklin D. Roosevelt's many visits for therapeutic treatment. We'll culminate the weekend with a brunch and tours of the 35-acre Hills & Dales Estate, including the Neil Reed designed home of the Fuller E. Callaway Family.

This fall's Heritage Reception will be held at Blue Springs, a unique 1,000-acre watershed surrounding beautiful crystal blue springs.

Upper-level Georgia Trust members are in for a special treat at the Fall Ramble's Heritage Reception, to be held at Blue Springs near Callaway Gardens. Cason and Virginia Callaway purchased the 1,000-acre watershed surrounding a quartzite aquifer that supplies Blue Springs around 1930. The reception will be held at a picturesque pavilion next to a one-acre, spring-fed pool blasted out of quartzite rock. President Roosevelt was a frequent visitor. To upgrade your membership to be a part of this event, call the Georgia Trust Membership Manager at 404-885-7805.

Members of the General Oglethorpe Society enjoyed a trip to Cuba this past January. This exclusive excursion was offered only to the Trust's General Oglethorpe Society, which consists of Chairman's Council and Chairman's Circle members.

For more information or to upgrade your membership level, please call 404-885-7805 or email membership@georgiatrust.org.

OLMSTED LINEAR PARK

ATLANTA, FULTON COUNTY

Marguerite Williams Award
& Excellence in Rehabilitation

Planned by Frederick Law Olmsted, Sr., and his sons as part of the Druid Hills subdivision at the start of the 20th century, the Olmsted Linear Park is now enjoying a fresh beginning to its second century. The park fell into disuse and disrepair in recent decades as it was threatened by highway development and otherwise viewed as an expendable resource in the ever-growing city of Atlanta. The rehabilitation of this park, its landscapes and structures, over the past 13 years has proved to be a wonderful healing process both for the land and for the community, and the project has inspired other community design efforts in the city.

GEORGIA THEATRE

After a fire gutted this Athens landmark in 2009, the future of the Georgia Theatre looked bleak. The owner, already in the process of restoring it, was determined to bring the theater back to life. Through a partnership with The Georgia Trust, donations were accepted for rehabilitation efforts. The interior was reconstructed to be much the same as the original, and the soot-covered brick walls were left exposed as a reminder of the devastating fire. ADA necessities and rooftop additions for office space and a café were added, providing much-needed additional income to the property. The Athens community, as well as numerous UGA alumni and music lovers, are grateful to have the beloved landmark back and looking so good.

HINMAN RESEARCH BUILDING

This incredible mid-century building on the Georgia Tech campus was in need of serious restoration and rehabilitation in order to better serve students in Tech's College of Architecture. The project began by thoroughly documenting the structure with Revit. Following that, concrete conditions were tested and repaired, and steel windows were repaired in place with new insulated glazing to significantly cut down on heat transfer through the panes. The dramatic open interior was reconceived to accommodate the College of Architecture's needs on a restricted budget while retaining historic materials. This building should serve as an inspiration for budding architects for many years to come.

OLD COMMERCIAL BANK OF METCALFE

This small, South Georgia bank building was constructed in 1916 in the town of Metcalfe. With much of the work being done by the building's owners, the non-original enclosed loggia was removed and a historically appropriate storefront reconstructed. The interior of the building was restored and updated to accommodate current use and was promptly rented to a local seamstress and upholsterer. The rehabilitation will hopefully encourage other preservation projects in this tiny historic commercial district which was listed on The Georgia Trust's 2009 Places in Peril list.

This year marks The Georgia Trust's 35th annual Georgia Preservation Awards. Since 1978, The Georgia Trust has recognized and honored projects and individuals who have contributed to the excellence of preservation in Georgia. The goals of the preservation movement – and of these awards – remain as relevant today: to recognize our history and improve the quality of life in our downtowns and throughout Georgia. This year's Georgia Preservation Award recipients range from a former ice plant to a historic landscape. We also recognize several individuals and projects with our highest awards: the Marguerite Williams Award, presented annually to the project that has had the greatest impact on preservation in the state; the Camille W. Yow Volunteer of the Year Award; and the Mary Gregory Jewett Award for Lifetime Preservation Service.

2012 Preservation Awards Committee: Chair Richard Laub, Monica Callahan, Greta Covington, Dave Crass, Elizabeth DuBose, Karen Huebner, Chris Lambert, Michael Miller, Josh Rogers, Susan Starr, and Burke Walker

Georgia Trust Staff: Mark C. McDonald, President and CEO; Kate Ryan, Director of Preservation; Emily Taff, Preservation Assistant

The awards committee bases its decisions on the contributions of the person or project to the community and/or state and on compliance with the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties. The committee recommends to the Trust officers the recipients of the Preservation Stewardship and Excellence in Restoration and Rehabilitation awards.

BRIGGS-SMITH BUILDING

The Briggs-Smith building is one of downtown Valdosta's oldest commercial buildings; it was probably built in the 1860s. It has served many functions including as a dry goods store, hardware store, and even a bath house which "Doc" Holliday, whose dentist office was just across the street, is reported to have visited. During the renovation by the owners, which began in 2008, the interior underwent extensive rehabilitation that included uncovering windows, original transoms, doors, skylights, and woodwork. The facade lost much of its original Victorian ornamentation in an early 20th century facelift, but its basic form remains intact. The building now serves as the corporate office for a local company, and is a beautiful addition to historic downtown Valdosta.

EMPORIUM BUILDING

This 1885 commercial building on Broad Street in downtown Augusta housed many retail enterprises before the McLeods bought the building and undertook its rehabilitation. The Emporium Building now houses nine upscale apartments on the 2nd and 3rd floors with rooftop decks and balconies that were sensitively added so as not to be visible from the facade. A parking conundrum was solved with interior parking for residents at the rear ground floor level and the 1st floor remains open for commercial space. The rehabilitation of this building has helped to improve the attractiveness of Augusta's Broad Street and bring residents back to the center of the city.

JUDGE H.W. HOPKINS HOUSE

This prominent Queen Anne style house with Italianate features was built in 1885 by Thomasville architect Tudor Rommerdall for Henry William Hopkins, who served as the city's mayor beginning in 1886. Hopkins was a strong proponent of civic improvements, so his house was one of the first in town to have natural gas lighting and running water. The surrounding area is now primarily commercial, but thanks to community efforts, the previous owners agreed to sell rather than move this house. With the aid of Thomasville Landmarks in the tax credit process, the new owners have beautifully rehabilitated the building to serve as the office for Mosaic Psychological Services.

WRECKING BAR BREWPUB AND THE MARIANNA

The Victor H. Kriegshaber House on Moreland Avenue in Atlanta was designed by architect Willis Denny and completed in 1900. It is one of the finest examples of the extravagant Beaux Arts style of late Victorian architecture in Atlanta. After the family moved in 1924, the house was used as a church, a dance studio and, until 2005, as the Wrecking Bar Architectural Antiques. The building's fate was uncertain until its current owners saved it from dilapidation, rehabilitating the structure as the Wrecking Bar Brewpub on the basement level and The Marianna, an event space, on the main floor.

MORGAN TENNIS COURT

Constructed in 1929, the Morgan Tennis Court is part of the Jekyll Island Club National Historic Landmark area. By 2002 the building had fallen into disrepair and was closed until 2009 when the Jekyll Island Authority began examining the building as potential space for a convention and event facility. The rehabilitation, which began in 2010, retained most of the historic material, including interior wall boards and views of the trusses above, while a balcony and separate kitchen facility were added to accommodate the facility's new use.

WAYNESBORO ICE PLANT

The City of Waynesboro Ice Plant was in operation from 1905 until the early 1970s, producing both ice and electricity for Waynesboro's citizens. The building fell into serious disrepair but avoided a demolition threat in 2000. In 2005 Mayor Jesse Stone decided to rehabilitate it. The rehabilitation maintains the ice plant's original industrial character, including preservation of the equipment such as a compressor for the ice manufacture and a generator used to power the plant's operations and later to fuel the city's first electric streetlights. This beautifully preserved building is now in use as a welcome center, museum, and meeting facility.

WAYNESBORO HIGH SCHOOL

The Waynesboro High School building was constructed circa 1936. The building was abandoned by 2000 and vandalism soon ensued, creating a blight on the neighborhood. Local residents and preservation commission members sought to save the community landmark from demolition by seeking development companies to rehabilitate the building. It is now a senior living facility with individual apartments in each of the original classrooms. The rehabilitated building maintains historic interior features including hallway cubbies, coat-hooks, wainscoting and even chalkboards. Additionally, energy efficiency and “green” building technologies were used throughout the project, resulting in Earth-Craft certification.

GEM THEATRE

The building that houses the GEM Theatre was originally built in 1920 as a furniture store, but became a theater in 1936 and operated as such until 1980 when it was put back into the retail industry as a clothing store. Over the years of transition, much of the interior finishes were removed or modified. In 2002 a local nonprofit organization was formed to revive the building after it had sat vacant for some time. The roof was replaced, exterior features restored, and the interior was rehabilitated referencing historic photos from 1936 to the mid-1950s. The GEM Theatre is once again a focal point of community life in downtown Calhoun and will hopefully inspire more businesses in this historic commercial district to follow suit.

JOHN C. GODBOLD BUILDING

Located in the heart of the Fairlie-Poplar district in downtown Atlanta, the John C. Godbold Federal building is an amalgamation of three originally interconnected buildings built for the Crumley-Sharp Hardware Company. The creative rehabilitation project, which has received LEED Gold certification, incorporates basement level parking beneath one structure, blast-proof metal replacement windows that match the style of the previous wooden windows, and interior spaces that juxtapose contemporary construction with historic structural materials.

BITSY GRANT TENNIS CENTER

The Bitsy Grant Tennis Center in Atlanta was designed in 1952 by Atlanta architect Richard Aeck. The restoration of the concrete and glass structure focused on the historic mid-century character of the facility. Most noticeably, non-contributing finishes were removed, original finishes were restored, and insulated glass for increased energy efficiency was installed in existing frames. On the interior, original paint schemes and even period furniture was chosen. Fundraising for the restoration was lead by the Friends of Bitsy Grant Tennis, and since its July 2011 reopening, the tennis center has already seen an increase in traffic. This is an exciting restoration for the Atlanta community and for the preservation of modern architecture.

EFFINGHAM COUNTY COURTHOUSE

The “grand neoclassical palace of justice” that is the 1909 Effingham County Courthouse was designed by Savannah architect Hyman Witcover. The courthouse had undergone two major renovations in its history which altered many of its original details. The restoration process sought not only to recover those architectural details and historic appearance, but to use the most sustainable means available with LEED energy standards as guidelines. The courthouse project was funded by SPLOST dollars and local laborers, tradesmen, and contractors conducted most of the work, furthering the project’s priority of investing in the local economy.

WALLACE GROVE SCHOOL

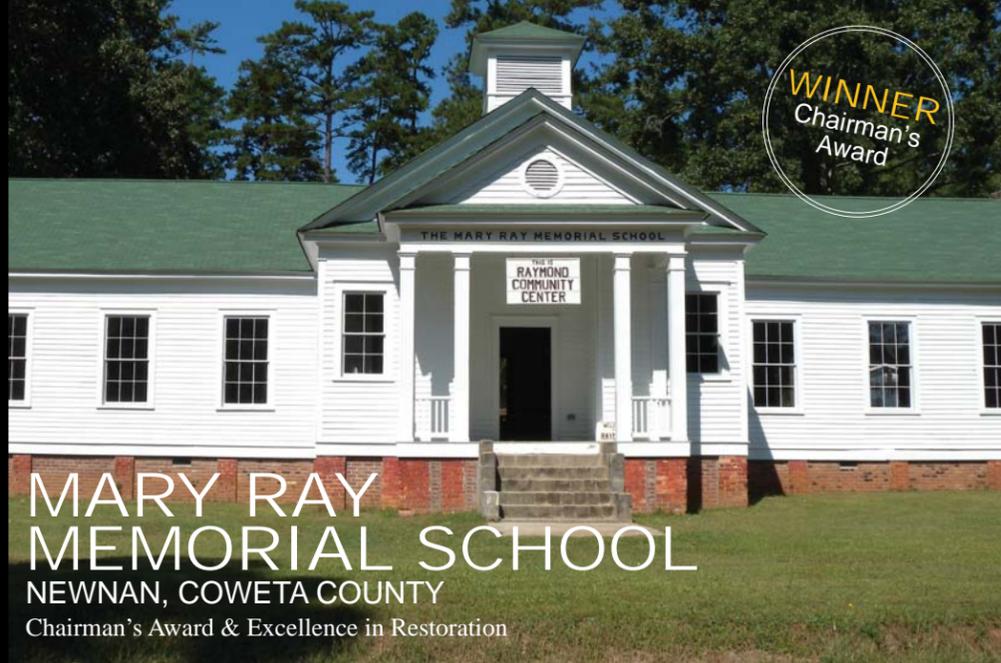

Built in 1901, the Wallace Grove School building is the last in situ school building of approximately 100 schools built for African-Americans in Madison County between 1871 and 1910. Pastor Tommy Chatman and the congregation were determined to restore the building as closely as possible to its original state. The pastor and his team conducted the work inside and out, carefully following the Secretary of the Interior’s guidelines for restoration, retaining as much historic material as possible. The congregation and the community protected an important resource and created the opportunity to interpret Morgan County’s educational history and black history for years to come.

MARY RAY MEMORIAL SCHOOL

The Mary Ray Memorial School held its first class in September 1908. The building was a cornerstone in the then-new town of Raymond in Coweta County, but by the 1980s the school had fallen into disrepair. It was placed on The Georgia Trust's Places in Peril list in 2009. A group of former students and community members set about bringing the property back to life. Their vision to restore the building to its original condition, combined with limited funding, ensured a restoration ethic wherein almost no historic material was discarded. With the help of a small grant from The Georgia Trust, this project was achieved using mostly local funds and volunteer labor. It is an inspiring example of a community-driven public restoration effort.

THOMAS COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Thomas County Historical Society was founded in 1952. Over the decades, it has worked to preserve and interpret artifacts, documents, and photographs which reveal Thomas County's rich heritage. In 1969 the organization found a permanent home for their collections at the Flowers/Robert House and, over the years, has preserved the home and other threatened structures that represent the scope of the county's history. The organization has recently become stewards of the magnificent Lapham-Patterson House, for which they have taken over operations and repair. The Thomas County Historical Society has proven to be a worthy steward and interpreter of Thomas County and Georgia history.

JENKINS COUNTY COURTHOUSE

Like other small towns and rural counties across America, Jenkins County has been hard hit in recent decades by a decline in industry, leading to a struggling economy and decreasing population. Despite this trend, the county and community have shown their commitment to preserving their built environment. In 1996 Downtown Millen Historic District was placed on the National Register. In 2008 the Jenkins County Board of Commissioners began efforts to restore the Jenkins County Courthouse, performing much-needed repairs to the grand 1910 public building and uncovering historic architectural details that had been obscured in a 1973 renovation. The preservation efforts of Jenkins County are encouraging as other towns seek to preserve the historic character of their communities.

Bill Underwood and John Turman have volunteered on Tuesdays at Rhodes Hall as a team for eight years. Besides entertaining visitors and leading tours, they are always willing to help out around the house, whether it be stuffing envelopes, organizing files or preparing Ramble material. John gets very enthusiastic about his tours, something noted with appreciation by guests, expanding upon historical fact and fiction about Rhodes Hall, Atlanta, and Civil War history, while never failing to throw in a plug for Hay House. Bill Underwood is never without a smile and a compliment, lifting everyone's spirits as he cheerfully helps staff members. In addition to Bill's dedicated volunteer work at Rhodes Hall, he and his wife are loyal 'Rambler' and Georgia Trust members. John and Bill's distinct personalities complement each other, and they have enjoyed each other's friendship as much as we have enjoyed having them around. These two have been dependable volunteers, invaluable assets to The Georgia Trust and Rhodes Hall, and we are grateful for their commitment, time and teamwork.

FAMILY DONATES MCLEMORE COTTAGE TO GEORGIA TRUST

Judith Davis and her son, Troy, have generously donated McLemore Cottage (pictured left), their family's rural retreat, to the Trust's Revolving Fund. Listed in the National Register of Historic Places, the cottage was built in 1864 by Chesly Bostwick and Elizabeth Thigpin McLemore. In 1964, two of Chesly and Elizabeth's granddaughters, Inez Sharpe McGregor and Lois Sharpe Mathews, lovingly restored the cottage. Following nearly 150 years of continual ownership, the family generously donated the McLemore Cottage to The Georgia Trust's Endangered Properties Program. The house is now available for sale.
